70-foot Hunting Cruise

Abaft of this is the galley, which is very roomy and convenient, being fitted with a large "Shipmate" cooking stove and a large ice box, plate racks, cupboards, sink, etc.

Next to the galley comes the dining saloon which takes up the full width of the vessel. This room is sumptuously upholstered, and fitted with a large dining table, revolving chairs, sideboard, lockers, etc. Opening from the saloon is a good bath room and toilet which is fitted up with every modern convenience—hot and cold water, etc.

In the extreme after end is a special state room, with two permanent bunks with drawers underneath and with wardrobs, wash basin and dressing table. The room opens on to a lobby with a stairway to the deck. In this lobby is a cupboard for hanging wet oil skins, etc.

On the deck is a large sunken pilot house which has a stairway leading down to the forward sleeping cabin. The steering gear is arranged so that it can be handled either from the pilot house or from the steering bridge at the after end of the pilot house outside. In the pilot house are two settee bunks, which, if necessary, can be used for sleeping purposes.

The vessel is provided with two dinghys, one of which is driven by an "Evinrude" motor.
